04 / CHOOSE A PRACTICAL START

Pick a niche you can serve.

Start with operational fit

What commodities and equipment are involved? Can your team explain the handling, scheduling and communication requirements? What capability would you need before accepting the freight?

Specialized freight may require additional experience, equipment, insurance, approvals or operating controls. Establish those requirements before marketing a capability you do not yet have.

Look for a credible way in

Can you identify relevant companies and contacts? Do you have experience, carrier relationships, geographic knowledge or a useful perspective that gives the conversation substance?

Start with one focused research list. Compare what shippers actually tell you with the assumptions that made the niche attractive.

Evaluate the business case

Consider the work required to quote, cover and manage the freight alongside potential margin, payment terms and service risk. A high freight spend alone does not make an account attractive.

Use early conversations to understand the buying process and service priorities. Decide what you will learn next before expanding into more niches.
