02 / MAKE THE PROCESS USABLE

Every contact needs a next step.

Prepare your working list

Keep the original 75-100 prospect target as a working-list example. Choose prospects you can explain a reason for contacting, rather than filling the list with unrelated companies.

For each company, capture the product or commodity, likely freight need, relevant contact, source of your research, and the question you still need to answer.

Make the outreach specific

The original road map uses 20 LinkedIn messages per day and a phone follow-up two days later. Treat these as the original operating cadence, not a platform limit or a guaranteed result.

Use a relevant observation and a clear reason for contacting the shipper. Log the response and follow the contact's stated communication preferences. If a prospect declines further contact, record that decision and act on it.

Turn activity into a decision

After each conversation, record what you learned, whether there is a relevant opportunity, and the next action. A contact without an owner or a next date is easy to lose.

At the end of the day, review replies, overdue follow-ups, new conversations and opportunities that need a specific action. Use this review to improve the next day's work.
